et nearly a year ago, we said that, though official permission must be sought and obtained publicly accept and wear a foreign order, such permission, in the case of civilians at all events, can be prosured without any difficulty; and that under the circumstances, the comparative exclusion of Englishmen from these distinctions in Japan was calculated to convey an impression certainly at variance with the sentiments of the Japanese Government. Since then, six British subjects have been decorated, viz., the three gentlemen mentioned above, and Mr. W. H. Stone, of the Telegraph Department; Mr. A. S. Aldrich, of the Railway Department; and Mr. P Osborn, of the Kanagawa, Kencho. A story is told of a foreign Representative in lapan whose relations with the Government of the country were consionally of a somewhat stormy nature. Fifteen or sixteen vears ago there occurred an event which seriously disturbed this official's equanimity, and while he was under the early influence of the shock, he was waited on by half-n-dozen Japanese officers, who solicited his aid towards obtaining instruction in a particular branch of military science. Their answer was an angry recommendation to learn manners first and tactics afterwards—advice which parplexed them not a little, seeing that they were entirely without knowledge of the incident which prompted this outbreak. Nor was their ignor. ance wonderful, seeing that the thing had happened ten miles away and that the actors were men of a different clan. Another instance of vicarious misfortune is reported of the Datch authorities, who recently applied to the Government of Japan for permission to employ Japanese coolie labour in the West Indies. The answer they received was. "Treaty revision first and coolie labour ofterwards," and this, we believe, brought the negotiations to a stand. still. It is, perhaps, somewhat hard on the coolies that treaty revision, a matter of which their ignorance must be tolerably profound, should be used as a barrier to their obtaining lucrative employment. But their case is no worse than was that of the Samurai who were debarred from studying the manual and plateon exercise because an Englishman riding on the Tokaido had been obliged to subscribe to Japanese sumptuary laws. At the same time we the Government of this country, assured finally of the honelessness of obtaining any revision of the present treaties in a more liberal sense, might make up its mind to abide, hereafter, hy the strict letter of those documents, and to with hold every privilege not specially stipulated for by their provisions. This would be an intelligible policy, but his hly unpleasant. We should not like to be strictly confined, once more, to the areas included within the treaty limits, and compelled to forego summer trips to Hakone, Miyano-shits, or Yukac. The fate of the Dutch

EXTRACTS.

MARIO. (In memorium, December, 1883.) Caward and onward rolls the car of song, Freighted with trombadours of ev'ry race; Yet over and anon fades there some face, Some favoured presence from its tuneful throng; And whom a master-bard that choir among Yields to the chilly clasp of death's ombrace, Then rieus from the Musne' market place. A dirge of desolation, loud and long.

O sweatest singer that the southern wind E'er wafted to make northern hearts rejoice! We now, who, mourning thee, recall a voice, Tuned to a diapason most divine, Bid thee farewell, and pray thy spirit find Its resting-place in some symphonions shrine ! C. C., in World.
